Is this government a public regulator or a private agent for a foreign investor in mining and petroleum projects?

THIS government's recent move to amend the Environmental Act 2000 to outwit the decision of the National Court sitting at Madang some months ago, is the outcome of our successive government's lack of a well-defined and concise investment policy on major resources development in this country.

In particular, our politicians do not have a clear view of their role as a government in major mining and petroleum development projects undertaken in the country.

They have failed to answer one basic question, namely: 'As a government, are they regulators for the public benefit, or are they agents for the private foreign investor?'

The primary function of any government is to make good laws for the well being of its people. And under the law, the major source of the government's revenue is the collection of taxes by exercising its taxation powers. With the moneys thus collected, the government of the day must provide certain basic services like health care, education and training facilities, public transport and generally, provide a setting conducive to commerce and industry and a sense of order in the social and economic life of the country. It is not such a long list compared with the funds that we can access as a government.

And in a country like PNG, where the population base are the indigenous societies characterized by villages, clans and tribal orders which are primarily land-based and rural, special policies must be formulated and implemented to ensure an orderly transition from the traditional setting to the modern setting. In modern day jargon, this is akin to community empowerment through capacity building.

We are an ancient people with our own world view of life, encompassing both the spirit world and the physical world. In effect, we uphold the view passed down by our ancestors from generation to generation that there is really only one world encompassing both the spirit and the physical, not unlike man, who is both spirit and matter combined.

Therefore, the physical environment being our habitat is very much part and parcel of our inner being as a people so where our physical environment is ruined in the name of money and material wealth, we are also ruined as a people.

Because the government does not have a clear national policy on mining and petroleum development, it is unable to make any value judgment when faced with various Project Agreements submitted for consideration and approval by the government. The government does not have the necessary yardstick by which to assess the pros and cons of any major project development submissions. This is akin to driving in a foreign city without a road map for that particular city.

In our blind zeal to access private foreign investor funds, we stooped so low that we lost our integrity as a government of a sovereign State and accordingly, confused our role as a government of the people, by the people, and for the people, under a written constitution.

Whilst in that state of confusion, our successive governments have viewed any proposals for major mining and petroleum development projects as "ready cash" and not mere proposals for possible development. It is like walking into a jungle and not recognizing the organic trees, full and vibrant with life, but seeing only the inorganic logs heaped in a log yard waiting to be shipped to Malaysia.

Unfortunately, this government in particular has jumped on the bandwagon of the foreign investor so that there is now a merger of functions between the government's public role vis-a-vis the citizens on the one hand and the government's pursuit of its ill-defined economic interest on the other hand. In effect, what has really happened, is that without a clear, crisp and concise national policy on mining and petroleum development, it was easy for the government to be enticed, lured or seduced into partnership with foreign investors because from the investors' point of view, they could not have hoped for a better business partner than the national government of a country where they will pour in their money.

With the government of a sovereign State securely on board their bandwagon with a dog collar around its neck (or is it an Irish Dog Collar), the foreign investor can then tap in on the government's law making powers and public resources to ensure a smooth ride for their capital and at the same time, exploit the government's taxation powers by getting away with hefty tax concessions. And if there is any opposition by the people on the land, then the investor can force the national government to deploy the national police force and if that fails, then there is the defence force to move in to keep the people at bay. And given that the national government has opted to become an agent for or a business partner with the private foreign investor, we are left without a public authority with any integrity to perform the public function of a government to protect the people, their habitats and their way of life.

By far, the better option to being a business partner with a foreign investor is to decline the offer to take up equity in the projects, in order to maintain our status as a government of a sovereign state with the necessary authority to impose and collect taxes in various forms and to revamp our foreign currency exchange regime to oversee the flow of capital in and out of the country to ensure that we do not miss out on any financial benefits due to us. We must also insist that all revenue generated from the sale of our resources must be brought back into the country as foreign currency and not be parked anywhere outside the country and the list is endless.

However, we opted to borrow money to buy equity and thus, relegated our sovereign state to the lowly position of a facilitator for private foreign investment, or alternatively, being foolishly content to play the role of an insignificant business partner with borrowed capital.

This government has failed the people it is bound to protect; compromised its public role as a law maker, and lost its integrity as an executive government of a sovereign state; further violated the sacred trust and abused its law-making powers with impunity by replacing good laws with bad ones; improperly curbed its own taxation powers by conceding hefty tax exemptions and that way, discriminating unfairly against existing businesses; overlooked its own foreign currency regime to allow a free flow of capital out of the country; improperly deprived itself of or unduly stopped from exercising the public function of government, having connived and colluded with foreign investors or compromised itself so as not to exercise its constitutional powers of good governance; abused its legal authority by deploying members of the 'Royal Papua New Guinea Constabulary' to protect its ill-defined business interests against the interests of its people; violated the Leadership Code to protect the politician's personal and political interests; and in particular, this government has failed to uphold both the letter and the spirit of the National Constitution.
