The PNG LNG Project and the Madang Nico Mine in Limbo

WHEN the proponents of the LNG Project were celebrating their success in getting the landowners to agree to their timetable to get the project off the ground, we cautioned in this column that there were far too many unanswered questions that would breed discontent among landowners over the whole project.

The issues we raised were firstly, the Land Titles Commission was yet to make its determination as to the identity of landowners in respect of each of the oil blocks which meant that there was no land demarcation for each such block. Secondly, the question of a proper social mapping and social impact study were yet to be undertaken by professional people with contextual knowledge of the various oil producing areas.

The whole thing is akin to making a garden.

Before one plants any crops, one must cut the bushes, chop the trees, let that dry up, and then burn it all. Clear the debris and then only can one plant a garden with appropriate crops suitable for that particular area. One does not simply walk into a jungle and start planting. That is exactly what this government did with the whole LNG project. The government had a timetable to meet, so it had to sacrifice all other concerns simply to meet the dateline set by the project developers and their funders, so they drove all the so called landowners to Kokopo like cattle, fed them, gave them extra cash to roam the villages around Rabaul in search of women, and then the 'landowners' gave their approval and returned to Port Moresby after more promises by the government that some K120 million would be paid to them after they signed their approval.

It is now close to a year after the Kokopo Deal and our 'landowners' are still waiting for the government to fulfil its promise. And with the government's failure to fulfil its promise, the people have started to block the construction phase of the project. And it is not a surprise for people like William Duma, the Minister for Petroleum, coming out and saying that all that money is now sitting in commercial banks awaiting payouts.

The reason Duma gave for nonpayment is that the government is unable to determine who the genuine landowners are, and who are not genuine landowners.

Well, we ask Duma: 'Were you not aware that there are numerous land claims still pending for determination before the Land Titles Commission when you were giving the undertaking that you will pay these 'landowners'? How is it possible that the minister is now surprised that there are no land demarcations conducted over the oil blocks in the Southern Highlands and the Gulf provinces?

And with the Madang Nico Mine, the whole thing with the present legal proceedings and the injunction must again rest with the government. This government and all past governments have this inability to build up a dialogue with its people. There is no communication between the people and their government. The people are always kept in the dark either because the government people think that the grass roots people would not understand or because the government people do not know the subject enough to communicate to the people. As Sir Peter Barter said, the company had undertaken many consultations with the people and had informed the people what the project would entail including issues of disposal of mine waste. And yet the people have engaged NGOs to lead them into battle with the Chinese company and the national government.

Yes, we are aware that the waste would be sunk many meters deep within the ocean floor like it was done in Misima. With that we have no dispute.

However, since the Misima Mine shut down, has there been a recent independent study of the effect of the tailings having been sunk within the ocean floors, and if so, may the people be informed as to what those studies have found?

What is now most obvious is that successive governments in this country are driven by economic considerations when it comes to major resource development in the country. It would seem that the moment they sight the cash flow projections and the moment they realize that monetary benefits to the government will be in the millions and billions, they "drop their pants" and run to the project developers boardroom, all too eager to give in to their demands like massive tax concessions and worse still, tax exemptions. It seems that there be properly assessed and the people must be mobilized to partake in the economic activities generated by these projects.

Look at the LNG Project. The landowners are all complaining that all major contracts have been dished out to foreign companies without any local content and even the subsidiary contracts are given to local foreign entities like Curtain brothers and there is nothing of value available for the local companies and particularly the landowner companies. And we hear that Inter Oil is starting up another LNG Project so we will now have two LNG Projects all within the same time frame for the government and the people.

All this means is that the government will simply double its load of problems and in both cases, the people will be the biggest losers both in social and economic terms.

In all these project studies, we never hear of any contribution from the Department of Social Welfare. We ask: "Why is it that the Department of Social Welfare is never involved from the beginning? And what about the Department of Agriculture? Are they involved as well? It would seem that the LNG Project was pulled off the ground solely by Arthur Somare with Anderson Agiru's assistance and with William Duma, Minister for Petroleum assisting and Tiensten from Planning in attendance. Even the Internal Revenue Commission was never consulted on the tax provisions in the Major Project Agreement the end result of which is that we allowed the developers to walk away with massive tax exemptions. This is the kind of isolation in which these projects are approved by the government. There is never any serious consultation between the various concerned departments and statutory institutions and worse still, there is no proper input from the local people who are the resource owners in this country.

And with the LNG Project now underway, there is no guarantee that the project will be completed within the stipulated time frame, which means the projected development costs will be even higher because of the loss of time. And what will happen to all the major contracts where the developers have undertaken to supply the product by a given time?

Let those in Waigani realize that they must take time to listen to the resource owners and that way, accommodate their wishes into the Major Project Agreements. The government must not plan for these projects as if the people do not exist. And most of all, the preliminary conditions precedent must be complied with by the government before any projects are approved to enter into construction phase. Why is it that we cannot do a thing right for once?

is never any serious social impact study or any other social considerations for the social well being of the people.

All our economic planning is done and projects are undertaken in a vacuum as if we the people do not exist. This appears to be the main concern for the Catholic Bishops Conference when they came out on the front page of our local newspapers posing the question whether the LNG project was a blessing or a curse. Whilst the government is celebrating the economic prospects, the people are wondering where they fit in within the government economic equation. What we ought to do is to change the way we assess our major economic projects.

Firstly, we ought to bring these projects into fruition one at a time and in a sustained manner so that there is a linkage from one project to the next. And the flow-on-effect of each project must
